Research Statement:
The poems in Resonator are a selection from the creative project of my PhD, ‘Understanding Poetry – How semiotic concepts can help reader and practitioner’. The poems respond to my research into syntagmatic and paradigmatic relations; ideas from Derrida, Barthes and Kristeva on the situating of poetics, and the works of the New Zealand poets I analyse. Far from confining the mechanics of poetry, semiotic concepts have opened up numerous possibilities for me to explore, with fresh understandings and dynamics to consider. The experience of studying in Canberra stirs up memories and comparisons and ways of looking at the self. The range of poems includes found material, Ekphrastic poems, conceptual and formal experiments, writing from the subconscious and writing biographically.

Collectively, the work takes the Japanese form of haibun (prose and haiku) as a model. In the past, I’ve kept my writing of contemporary poetry and exploration of haiku and related forms separate, but in Resonator I interweave them, working within the constraints of each form, but also watching as they collide and fuse when placed together. The connections or gaps between sections of some poems (like haibun) necessitate cognitive and imaginative leaps, which reflect the influence of multiple forms of media on our society and the products of a postmodern age which blur the boundaries of genre.

Biographical note:
Owen Bullock has published a collection of poetry, sometimes the sky isn’t big enough (Steele Roberts, NZ, 2010); two books of haiku, wild camomile (Post Pressed, Australia, 2009) and breakfast with epiphanies (Oceanbooks, NZ, 2012), and the novella, A Cornish Story (Palores, UK, 2010). He is a former editor of Poetry NZ, and was one of the editors who produced Take Five: Best Contemporary Tanka, Vol IV (Kei Books, USA, 2012). Owen is a PhD candidate at the University of Canberra.
sem

I live in the institution of my mind

End the buffering

especially not a trope

helicopter parents

naked without a phone

I might look like the obsessive/compulsive one *he said ‘I am’

... never heard any more from him at the atomic level things are separate they still affect each other the whirr

of the motor
on the fan

38° you see things
in yourself
Bullock  Resonator: Unearthing Poetry

*

publicise others?

I don’t even

waiting to be asked

climate controlled
for your comfort
tweet you

network engaged individual versus the surveilling state

Sunday morning
three pigeons
on the stave

*

$30 for the both

authentication

Tuesday
a young man squirts his arm pits at the bus stop

*

“& a scatter of light . . .

it touches the stars” - Alistair Paterson hats off navigating the waters

to a settlement

writing late (tired tomorrow?)
worked out
unclouded

rained

*

scrawled in excrement
on a wall
it could be mud I sniffed it
but couldn’t tell

*I am
a gay
fag
shit
only yesterday I wanted to say something about self-reflective exercises but didn’t get a chance

*

you haven’t read it yet?

I can read music for classical playing but I like jazz

bollards
a thousand gravestones

he sometimes deliberately
does things the hard way wore a red & brown zigzag cardigan for ten years

but no one got the joke

his partner persuaded him to let go

*
who’s your go-to poet?

the man on the bus
who says hello to everyone the two young women who sit and have a real chat (the way he lights up)

the man busking selling loose poems for $2 who welcomed me to town with one called ‘The Visitor’ the student sheltering from the rain who asked if I was waiting for someone and leant me his cell

*
don’t work so hard

the shock
doesn’t sink in

racing through lists

moments commodities
hours investments
this day
a stock market opportunity a child waves to you another tries to get out of his trundler

the manager longs for a steadying hand hold

for a moment
my skin smells of your skin I feel delicious

*

spider threads
link the immaculate
air conditioners

a child’s painting
hangs on a string
rotates in the air flow

*
I’ve mellowed out a bit remember me in Year 7 I was insane

what’s conscience?

that’s when you care about what you do

signs of the Buddha: long earlobes wheels on the soles of the shoes first you bought an ironing board now you want to buy an ironing board and iron

that second hand shirt has two stains on it, how much did it cost?

$10
that’s $5 per stain

the extra ironing board will make a great bookshelf

*

I can play
kind of guitar

value in a system
she’s already ninti

*

potentially dissident

exogenesis –
did life
transplant here?

*

a boy
nods & mutters
at numbers on the bus

intersection
lanes funnel

half the city has name tags on strings the work of art

not the icon

an oil on canvas town

learning to skip
ahead

The National Collection of Everything

it’s a very shirt tucked in kind of place but a lot of people are carrying tunes talking about art
he foams
at the mouth

bus stop
one homeless man
introduces us
to another

bus ride
her pigtail
hangs in my notes

I’m not allowed to stand for very long I’ve got a certificate from the doctor in case mum asks me to go round the mall with her in Year 9 we had to make a controversial art work

I need more glittery headbands

A Wild Concession Card Must Be Shown To The Driver

“I could not swallow the lake” Clarence Major Bullock  Resonator: Unearthing Poetry

I tried

full of bricks
whole eucalypts

museum
not enough
dust

families
walk by the water
cycle

*

she has a poet voice

I’m stuck here in the middle aisle wondering what’s going on

*

did you have words you didn’t earn?

he called me an Imagist embodied

enminded

I live here now reflection is not highly thought of don’t just keep going transmitted, how you feel always exploring the new land a company called disjunction media

an almost song

*I

I wouldn’t know an app
if it knocked me over

(I wonder if there is an app that knocks you over) the idea of the origin of life is so mysterious it’s not real

*did you feel the solstice blowing in? you didn’t?
most people could feel it blowing in, it’s going to be a hot summer

we heard you used to go
Bullock  Resonator: Unearthing Poetry

to a discussion group the way you elbowed him in the guts what was that about?

she remembers what she wore the night she met her husband daring

no one dared me
to do anything I dared to break the aerial of the car to take dirty magazines to school

to help a woman leave her violent husband
twice

I’d like to say everybody told me I was crazy but some of these were secret

I gave up smoking
when I was eleven
gave up sucking my thumb
when I was eleven
gave up wetting the bed
when I was eleven

according to the Primal Scream guy my childhood ended
when I was eleven

but not for any of these reasons
symptom

that’s not what you’re here for

to live a life
    and in living, announced at birth, continued with each affirmation of name, status to the evocation of personality,
the writer of poems and stories and the years that came first . . .

to cross out the shadow on the moon to scribe the dance and paintings of dancers I’m language made into and out of
to immerse
    in what the other has written and live it too disappointments at what’s read precede delight, often in the same
text that’s changed everything nothing, time moonched perspective munted

I’ll put a rainbow in your hand fill a death with everything except certainty feel at home on the street we don’t like roles

Bullock    Resonator: Unearthing Poetry

at the hairdressers someone says

_ I don’t want to misunderstand the sign _ he is a

once it’s become a mirror can glass be glass again – paraphrasing Wanda Coleman when did I exist without words?

before I uttered
a time

I can’t go back
the writing’s all over my face

you read me know my mood

just like the psychoanalyst

he doesn’t remember being a baby either

may or may not want to go back to the mother-god

gargling declared

mother
mirror
breakfasts

we ate alone
stole open
rice pudding tins

when my brother beat me to the top crust I took out all the slices and got the crust from the bottom

I became a vegetarian when I was fourteen Mother said, you can do your own cooking from now on

gave me
ten pounds a week

I went to Tescos
bought milk, eggs, potatoes, spaghetti kept the food in a suitcase under my bed

I didn’t know how to cook spaghetti the packet stayed there for two years till I left home

I lived on omelettes
and boiled potatoes
with salt
not there

“I will patiently reinvent your foment” – Michele Leggott

She didn tell me
she was pregnant before

Father didn say ee an mother woudn gettin on

Ie didn knaw ’Arry
awned part a the owse

Ie didn think she’d ever want ta leave she’d ever actually gaw

Ie didn think the roof woud ’old when the railway carridge rattled didn expeck Gran woud ’it me with the buckle

didn realise me son woud walk owt sa young

didn think Ie’d miss un